AN "UNHEARABLE" MESSAGE

Author: Viktor Veselovsky

May 2012

You received another email from your friend.

Here is a piece of it:

"...Attached is the audio file "unhearable.wav" which contains a message encoded by a variant of Morse code. Each character is represented by a unique sequence of dits and dahs. The length of a sequence is the same for every character. The message is a modification of a famous quote. Send me the last word of the message along with the name of a character that had spoken the original quote, separate the two words by a comma. Your answer will serve as a verification that you were able to decode my message.

Here is a clue: human senses are limited..."

Based on your experience with the previous mail with an invisible message (see the challenge "An Invisible Message") you expect that there will be nothing to hear.

What a surprise, there is a strange melancholic tune to listen to.

But where is the Morse code?
